Round and Round They Go

If some U. S. legislators have their way, the government's investigators will be spending most of their time investigating each other. The latest request by House Democratic Leader Hale Boggs to have the FBI investigated leaves a question in mind — by whom?

One answer bound to come to mind is the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA). It is, however, probably already engaged in such an investigation. At least we wager nobody knows if it is or isn't — and wouldn't say so anyway.

But the next question is a better one — if some legislator gets his dander up at the CIA, or its director, who will investigate it?

Sounds to us like the ring of tigers who turned into butter chasing their own tails.
